Premiers Clark, Redford talk joint energy export plan

Gateway. Leaders scheduled to publicly discuss progress Nov. 5

British Columbia Premier Christy Clark and Alberta's Alison Redford have appointed a team of senior bureaucrats to develop an energy export plan, barely a year after a high-profile disagreement over the proposed Northern Gateway pipeline strained the two leaders' relationship.

Clark and Redford are scheduled to publicly discuss the progress of the joint energy plan on Nov. 5 in Vancouver following the Alberta premier's address to the city's Board of Trade. A final report is due on Dec. 31.

The premiers are attempting to move past their very public clash over the Northern Gateway pipeline, which was the subject of a meeting in Calgary last October that Clark later described as "frosty."

Clark had insisted the project must meet a series of conditions, including strict environmental standards and assurances that B.C. would receive a "fair share" of the economic benefits, to win her approval, which prompted Redford to suggest Clark was attempting to pick Alberta's pockets. But a joint statement issued Tuesday was the latest sign that relations between the two premiers are warming.

The Alberta-B.C. working group has been given a mandate to share information, collaborate on policy and address federal gaps on energy issues.

Illness

Two more penguins die at Calgary Zoo

Two more penguins have died of unrelated illnesses at the Calgary Zoo, and veterinarians are taking precautions with at least nine more tuxedo-clad birds bound for the facility.

The zoo announced Akemi, a three-year-old Gentoo penguin, died of heart failure Monday related to avian malaria.

Zoo officials classified the infection as the "second biggest killer of penguins in captivity," and noted it's the first such case in this part of North America.

Dr. Doug Whiteside, a senior veterinarian, said a wet summer and June's historic floods likely exposed the animals to more mosquitoes carrying the parasite.

Two Humboldt penguins died in August, and Whiteside suggested the cases may be linked as they all shared the same outdoor exhibit.

In a separate incident, Eduardo, a three-and-a-half-year-old male Humboldt penguin, died Sunday of aspergillosis, a fungal infection of the respiratory system.

The infection is one of the most common causes of death in both captive and wild penguins. However, the flood that swamped the riverside facility may have also played a role in that case.

"With the floods we had in Calgary we certainly know that the fungal load all around Calgary has increased," Whiteside said.

"That's probably why we're seeing outbreaks."

New tracking tool for ETS riders

Transit. ETS launches real-time digital departure signs at two busy transit centres

Transit riders using the U of A or West Edmonton Mall transit centres may have noticed the new bus tracking tool made available Tuesday.

The ETS Live departures signs display real-time departures for buses on routes 111 and 128, and scheduled times for other routes operating out of these busy terminals.

"We chose these routes because they serve post-secondary institutions and operate out of a single garage. It simplified the launch," said ETS director of technology and information management, Lorna Stewart.

Using Smart Bus GPS technology, ETS will track drivers in real-time en route, and refresh departures signs every 30 seconds. Those same details will be available on the ETS Live Bus Finder mobile feature in a few weeks, according to Stewart.

"I use this bus stop for work and shopping. It'll be a lot easier than digging through my purse for my cell phone," said regular rider, Jennifer Ball, upon noticing the departures sign.

"I don't usually have my cell phone on me, so I like this," said frequent ETS user Michelle Bruno.

Stewart said depending on how many new buses with Smart Bus technology come into the fleet in coming months, the service may expand to include route 7 this winter. In the meantime, ETS is asking for customer feedback on the initial two departures boards.

"It's phase one for ETS Live. We're giving these boards a try — if we get a good response we'll look at expanding their use,"

At a glance

- Busier routes, like 8 and 9, aren't scheduled to be included in the launch of ETS Live, but LRT stations already make use of similar technology.
- Using four lines of text, the digital boards display date and time and by-the-minute countdown for departure of Smart Bus routes 111 and 128.

said Stewart.

Diotte: The people have spoken and I'm on their side

Week away. Mayoral candidate says other contenders have ignored important issues like state of roads, rising taxes and arena deal

ryan.tumilty@metronews.ca

With less than a week to go, Kerry Diotte isn't paying attention to donor lists, polls or any other part of this mayoral horse race.

Diotte insists he will be the winner next Monday night, because he has aligned himself with what the people are looking for and what they are telling him at the doorsteps.

"We are representing the agenda of Edmontonians," he said during an editorial board meeting with Metro Tuesday.

He said while door-knocking, residents have consistently told him about the poor state of the city's roads, the pain of rising taxes and the arena deal.

"Those are the issues. I don't need to do a poll," said Diotte.

He said the other major candidates in the race were ignoring those issues and talking about grand visions instead.

"Their agendas are not Edmontonians' agendas. They are not. They have their own," he said.

He said he has become more aggressive with his opponents in the last week, because he believes they are moving onto his turf.

"I am concerned that they are trying to take over some of the issues that we've owned," he said, noting debt and roads as the primary targets.

Diotte said when he decided to run for mayor it was because he didn't think he could change the city from his council seat.

"I was an outsider in the last council and I just thought, 'I can't do this,'" he said. "I decided I am either going to be the leader or I'm not coming back to a city council where their agenda is to keep hiking taxes."

He said he had motions to reduce printing costs and reduce the number of consultants the city hires, as well as proposing smaller increases to the police budget, but he didn't have support from fellow councillors.

Diotte said he hasn't identified a specific project or programs the city would have to cut, because he thinks that is a decision of council.

If he's elected next week, Diotte believes it will be on a tide of public sentiment that other councillors will have to take note of and respect his move towards a leaner city.

He said he hasn't even considered what will happen next if he isn't elected.

"The public wants a different direction. I have to stand up for what they want. I have to be all in," he said.

Police prostitution sting. Allen offered plea deal

An Alberta politician who was on government business in Minnesota when he was charged following a police prostitution sting has been offered a plea deal.

But Mike Allen's lawyer, Dave Risk, says his client won't even consider the offer until more details in the case are released at his next court hearing, set for Nov. 13 in St. Paul, Minn.

Just Getting Started. Books to be tracked using hashtags

stephanie.dubois@metronews.ca

It has a red cover, it's free and it's travelling around Edmonton. Social media hashtags are being used to track the travels of 17 copies of Just Getting Started: Edmonton Public Library's First 100 Years, 1913-2013 as the books are dropped off in various locations around the city.

The book highlights the first century of the Edmonton Public Library (EPL) and welcomes readers to leave comments in both the back of the book but also via social media.

"It's just a fun way to share the word about this book, which is about the first 100 years of the Edmonton Public Library. We're hoping that Edmontonians get on board and have fun with it," said Richard Thornley, manager of Stanley A. Milner library.

The history of the library's more racy collection is just one of the chapters highlighted in local author Todd Babiak's book.

City resident Houssein Kayad was the first to borrow the Churchill Square edition, saying he was interested in learning more about one of his favourite city facilities.

"I want to know more about it," he said.

The online and book comments collected from readers of the 312-page book will be tallied by library staff in mid-November, when all of the books are collected. The comments will be shared at a later date.

"We wanted as many people to have access to the book as possible. We're all about sharing and we figured if we couldn't share a free copy of our own history, what could we share?" said Thornley.

The book can be found at any of the city's libraries or can be downloaded at epl.ca.

EPL's historical book will be making its way around the city, as readers use hashtags to track it. STEPHANIE DUBOIS/METRO

Candidates keeping signs in check

Every election season brings with it a barrage of signs and a barrage of complaints about them, but some candidates have decided to keep their name in private property only.

Nita Jalkanen, running in Ward 2, said she believes election signs represent an old kind of campaigning.

"I would like to think voters are a little bit more savvy or sophisticated today and are ready for some refreshing change in our political representatives, including our campaigns," she said.

Jalkanen said she is focused on door knocking during her campaign and when people have asked, she has put campaign signs on their property.

Ed Gibbons, the incumbent in Ward 4, said he has kept 95 per cent of his signs on private property. He said signs on private property show voter intent and real support.

"It shows that basically people are voting for me. On public property all it is, is a blight," he said.

Nothing funny about this cast of comedians

They're the real deal. Third annual Comedy Festival gathers over two dozen top jokers

From Oct. 16 to 19, venues across the city will feature top-drawing headliners, local up-and-comers, YouTube sensations and even kid-focused funny folk for an annual comedy festival of late-night laugh sessions, cabarets and even a gala or two.

"Edmontonians may not realize how good this lineup is," said festival producer and stand-up comedy veteran Andrew Grose, pointing to headliners like SNL's Tim Meadows and Canadian favourite Sean Cullen.

"But they also don't realize what a good audience they are. We don't take ourselves too seriously here; it makes for a fabulous crowd."

Friday and Saturday night gala events, with names like John Wing, Big Daddy Tazz and Julie Kim, will run at the Paramount Theatre on Jasper Avenue — a change from the Citadel as a key venue.

"The theatre has a good vibe; it feels right. And insider's tip: Go to the Paramount shows," said festival president Graham Neil, who will host two other events and try out his own material.

"My comedy credits aren't enough to get into a festival, so I had to make my own."

Neil also co-ordinated a free Saturday afternoon kid's show, an amateur contest and a workshop for those curious about stand-up comedy.

"Helping develop talent and reward it — that's part of our celebration too. We're looking at what footprint we make on the city," said Grose.

Local entertainment reporter Graham Neil founded the Edmonton Comedy Festival 3 years ago. The aspiring comic said TV persona is good for about 30 seconds on stage. "After that, I better be funny," he said. CONTRIBUTED

Repairathon volunteers are getting ready for the Oct. 27 event, which will allow people to get their damaged clothes fixed for free. COURTESY KAREN LEE

Your blouse is torn, not trash

Ripped jeans and missing shirt buttons will be a fashion trend of the past after volunteers come together to mend damaged goods.

Aimed at decreasing the amount of clothing bound for the landfill, the second Edmonton Repairathon on Oct. 27 will help members of the public fix any minor clothing repairs, such as hemming or fixing zippers, all for free.

"We're just wanting to help as many people as we can," explained Kate Spencer, co-ordinator of the event.

The event sprang from a desire to teach people how to maintain their clothing and be more eco-friendly.

The Repairathon idea started in Toronto and eventually made its way west, said organizers. The first Repairathon was held only for family and friends as a warm-up to this month's event.

"We had a lot of fun at the last one. Really (it's about) the ability to help people and make a difference," said Spencer.

People can bring their clean, damaged clothes to Abby Road Co-op at 10950 82nd Avenue from 2 to 4 p.m. on Oct. 27.

Tinderbox Egypt. Security tightened during Muslim holiday

Tanks stood at intersections and roadblocks cut main thoroughfares in Egypt on Tuesday, as authorities tightened security during the annual Muslim Eid al-Adha holiday amid continued deadlock between supporters of the ousted Islamist president and the military-backed interim government.

Troops sealed off Cairo's central Tahrir Square with rows of armoured vehicles and barbed wire, hoping to thwart any new attempt by supporters of Mohammed Morsi to enter. In recent weeks, they have tried to storm the plaza, the birthplace of the 2011 uprising that forced Hosni Mubarak out. Authorities have warned pro-Morsi protesters against entering Tahrir. Feds failing missing women: UN official

Disappearances of aboriginal women. Feds have so far refused to entertain the idea of an inquiry

The federal government should set up a national inquiry into the "disturbing phenomenon" of missing and murdered aboriginal women, a senior UN rights official said Tuesday.

James Anaya, the UN special rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples, has spent the last nine days touring the country, talking to aboriginals and both federal and provincial government officials.

And while governments across Canada have pledged aboriginal women, it's not enough, Anaya said in Ottawa as he wrapped up his visit.

There has been strong pressure from aboriginal groups and some provinces for an inquiry into the disappearances. The Native Women's Association of Canada estimates there have been more than 600 such cases in the last 20 years.

Ex-mayor pleads guilty to battery, false imprisonment

Former San Diego Mayor Bob Filner pleaded guilty Tuesday to charges involving unwanted physical contact with three women at public events under an agreement that calls for three months of home confinement and three years of probation.

Filner resigned in August after women came forward with accounts of sexual harassment.

One false imprisonment count involved a woman restrained against her will at a fundraiser. Two counts of battery involved a woman who was kissed without permission and a woman whose buttocks were grabbed.

Two girls charged in cyber-bullying of 12-year-old

Two girls have been arrested in the death of a 12-year-old central Florida girl who authorities say committed suicide after being bullied online by several girls for nearly a year, a sheriff said Tuesday. The girls, ages 12 and 14, have been charged with felony aggravated stalking, says the Polk County Sheriff's Office.

Authorities say Rebecca Sedwick, on Sept. 9, climbed a tower at an abandoned concrete plant and hurled herself to her death. The bullying began over a "boyfriend issue," and Rebecca had become depressed, Sheriff Grady Judd said.

Playing a game of thrones

In a speech from the throne Wednesday, the Tories will be driving ahead with their jobs and tough-on-crime agendas while steering slightly to the left to pick up passengers on the social and consumer-issues track. Several consumer-friendly measures are aimed at turning the attention of voters away from the Senate spending controversy.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Relief ahead for cable, satellite TV subscribers?

The sales pitch will include measures directed at alleviating consumer irritants, such as a plan to force cable and satellite TV providers to adopt a pick-and-pay price model, in conjunction with the bundled-channel payment plans.

LUKE WISLEY (FLICKR: LUKE WISLEY)

The friendly skies could get even friendlier

The Tories also hope voters will appreciate moves to create an airline-passenger bill of rights, designed to compensate people who are inconvenienced when air carriers overbook flights.

Reining in those roaming fees

There will also likely be references to increasing competition in the wireless sector and to capping roaming fees.

"We think roaming fees have been a long-standing concern for not only consumers but for competition within the telecom sector," Industry Minister James Moore said.

Will #thronespeech be a trending topic?

The Conservatives already have a website and Twitter hashtag set up to bring Canadians highlights from the throne speech under the banner "Seizing Canada's Moment — Security and Prosperity in an Uncertain World."

Trudeau: You can't trust the Tories

The opposition is sure to take advantage of the optics. The Tories, says Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau, cannot be trusted to do any of the things they'll promise in the speech.

"You asked for open and honest government," Trudeau says in a video message posted on the party's website. "Instead, you're getting secrecy, distrust and scandal."

Ontario-born Eleanor Catton wins Booker Prize

The Luminaries. Catton becomes the youngest writer to win the award, for her ambitious, epic 19th-century gold-rush murder mystery

Youth and heft triumphed at the Booker Prize on Tuesday, as 28-year-old Ontario-born, New Zealand-based author Eleanor Catton won the fiction award for The Luminaries, an ambitious 832-page murder mystery set during the 19th century.

The choice should give heart to young authors of oversized tales. Catton is the youngest writer to win the prestigious award — and her novel is easily the longest Booker champion.

In her acceptance speech, she thanked her editors, her agent and her publishers for not putting pressure on her while writing her novel.

"I was free, throughout, to concern myself with questions not of value but of worth. This is all the more incredible to me, because The Luminaries is and was ... a publisher's nightmare," she said.

"The shape and form of the book made certain kinds of editorial suggestions not only mathematically impossible but — even more egregious — astrologically impossible."

Catton had been bookmakers' joint favourite among the six prize finalists, alongside British novelist Jim Crace, for his rural parable The Harvest.

Catton received her trophy, which comes with a 50,000-pound ($83,000) cheque, from Camilla, the Duchess of Cornwall, during a dinner ceremony at London's medieval Guildhall.

Protest erupts in Italy

Nazi war criminal's funeral called off

The bitterly protested funeral of Nazi war criminal Erich Priebke was called off hours after it was to have taken place Tuesday by his lawyer, who said police prevented friends and family members from attending amid a noisy protest against the planned religious ceremony.

Shouting "murderer" and

"executioner," hundreds of people jeered as Priebke's coffin arrived for the funeral mass to be celebrated by a splinter Catholic group opposed to the Vatican's outreach to Jews. Protesters even heckled a priest arriving at the gates, yelling, "Shame."

But Priebke's lawyer said the funeral did not take place "because authorities did not allow people to enter who wanted to come in."

Gigantic oarfish a rare find

The legend continues.

According to research institute, the discovery is the longest bony fish in the world

A marine science instructor snorkelling off the Southern California coast spotted something out of a fantasy novel: The silvery carcass of an 18-foot-long (five-metre-long), serpent-like oarfish.

Jasmine Santana of the Catalina Island Marine Institute needed more than 15 helpers to drag the giant sea creature to shore on Sunday.

Staffers at the institute are calling it the discovery of a lifetime.

"We've never seen a fish this big," said Mark Waddington, senior captain of the Tole Mour, CIMI's sail training ship. "The last oarfish we saw was three feet long."

Because oarfish dive more than 3,000 feet (914 metres) deep, sightings of the creatures are rare and they are largely unstudied, according to CIMI.

The obscure fish apparently died of natural causes. Tissue samples and video footage were sent to be studied by biologists

Too much risk. U.K. bank set to cut ties with Somali money transfer company

A British bank could soon be cutting a financial lifeline for millions of Somalis.

Barclays is poised to sever its ties to Dahabshiil, one of the Somali expatriate community's biggest money transfer services, as part of a larger reorganization of its business. Barring a successful last-minute court challenge, experts say the move will jeopardize 100 million pounds ($160 million US) worth of payments made from the U.K. each year.

Barclays' move, part of an industry-wide effort to insulate banks from the risks associated with money-laundering and corruption, could force Dahabshiil to stop executing transfers between individuals within days. A court ruling had been expected Tuesday but was delayed because arguments ran late. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

One more reason to go for that popcorn at the movies

Get those M&M's too. 'Oral interference', from chomping to chatting, blunts the power of promos, a new study finds

KIERON MONKS
Metro World News in London

Eating popcorn makes you insensitive to advertising in cinemas, as "oral interference" disrupts our ability to learn brand names, claim researchers at the University of Cologne. Test groups who had been eating remembered nothing compared to a group who had not, said study author Dr. Sascha Topolinski, who enlightened us further.

Please explain this mysterious process.

The mouth automatically generates sub-vocal speech when we encounter novel names, which is how a brand embeds itself. But if you are eating something, your mouth cannot train with the word. In our case it was popcorn.

So if my mouth does the remembering, why am I so bad with names?

My last name is difficult so I understand, but people who are bad with names often are suffering interference. Try to keep your mouth free in future.

Can I ignore advertising everywhere by chewing at the right times?

It could work — say by chewing gum to avoid TV commercials and Internet banners. Our subjects quite enjoyed the cinema adverts without being able to remember anything about them.

So it works with all foods?

Yes and by vocal interaction like chatting, even smoking a cigarette would have that effect.

Are you worried that advertisers might kill you?

Well, our research is only about new brands so Apple and Burger King are already in your brain. One solution could be that cinemas only sell snacks after the adverts. That would please everyone.

FLYING SOMEWHERE? TAKE A SEAT

I am told there was a time when "flying the friendly skies" was a luxurious experience. That, of course, was before the skies became just a little less neighbourly.

Now, every time I travel, I have to head to the airport three hours early so that I have time to check my luggage, completely disrobe for security, have them confiscate half of my toiletries, then be told that my carry-on can't be carried on because I recklessly included a pair of tweezers, which nowadays, is tantamount to a weapon of mass destruction.

I then have to gather all of my personal belongings, get dressed all over again, wait in line to buy a $12 bottle of water, because apparently it's OK to have one, just not to carry your reasonably-priced one past the checkpoint. Then I head to the gate for boarding. Theoretically, it would be here that I could finally relax and enjoy the journey, only now I am starving and that bottle of water has made me require use of the facilities. Unfortunately, we are now under the strict regime of air transit regulations, meaning that first I have to undergo a training seminar on seat-belt fastening and proper employment of oxygen masks that we faithfully assume will reveal themselves in the event of a shift in cabin pressure. Then, once finally liberated from our shackles by a light and faint Pavlovian bell, I find myself behind every weak-bladdered and nervous-stomached traveller for a chance to approach the majestic lavatory. When I finally emerge, the refreshment cart has passed me by, which is just as well because, while they do sell food you don't want at prices it isn't worth, they no longer accept cash anyway. Only Visa and perhaps Amex, but as luck would have it, I only brought my MasterCard.

JUST SAYIN'

Now, I may be frustrated, hungry, and cranky, but I would never think to take it out on any of the flight crew. After all, they're just doing their job, and even if they weren't, any loss of composure could get me Tasered by an air marshal and/or put on the no-fly list, which in addition to complicating future travel, would really make it hard to get back home.

That said, I take comfort in the fact that the Security Authority's ever-growing roster of ordinances, while occasionally misguided, are intended toward the honourable purpose of keeping us all safe and sound. Then, just over a week ago, a nine-year-old kid with no ticket, no money, and no adult supervision manages to hop on a flight to Vegas.

Now, I find myself compelled to rethink.

Just sayin'.

Mike Benhaim is filling in for Paul Sullivan, who will return next week.

RE: Unpaid Interns: Toronto Students Scrub Hotel Toilets For Nothing, published Oct. 15

A Vancouver luxury hotel placed an ad seeking unpaid interns to bus tables last month, igniting public outcry.

Now, several interns have complained they aren't gaining necessary experience performing menial jobs.

Her internship had nothing to do with her hopes and dreams to work in the hotel and hospitality industry.

When she one day applies for a career job, and puts down her experience as "I am great at changing sheets, cleaning toilets and disposing of used condoms," will that help?

What happened to her and many other interns is not right and it is not fair. The only hope she and many have is to suck it up and hope to make some kind of contact that can help them in the future.

But with four interns per year (one every three months), over two year period (assumed length of the program she is studying) how many interns is she now competing with?

And all are relying on the same contact or several contacts at the same place.

Let's say she is going to medical school and wants to be a surgeon, her internship would be equivalent to sitting at a receptionist desk and doing patient data entry. Calling patients, following up on surgeries, booking appointments, etc. After four years, you may be the best data entry clerk, but you can definitely not perform a surgery. At least I wouldn't let you touch me.

Taylor Swift. On the heels of a record-setting sixth songwriter-artist of the year award, star says her next album is taking a 'different turn'

Swift sat down for an interview after the ribbon-cutting on the new $4-million US Taylor Swift Education Center at the Country Music Hall of Fame and Museum in her adopted hometown of Nashville.

Next month you leave on a stadium tour of Australia, making you the first female solo performer to tour that country since Madonna 20 years ago. Madonna was the top pop star in the world at the time. Do you see yourself as that kind of pop star?

I would never see myself that way. I see myself as kind of this girl who writes songs in her bedroom. You can kind of dress it up all you want and you can put together an amazing theatrical production; you can become a better performer as time goes by, and you can try to excite people, but I'm always going to be a girl who writes songs in her bedroom in my own personal perception of myself.

You said recently you've been working on songs for the new album for about six months. What can you tell us about what you have planned?

It's too early to tell who are going to be my predominant collaborators, but I do know that my absolute dream collaborators were Shellback and Max Martin on the last project.

Taylor Swift appears at the premiere of Romeo and Juliet in Los Angeles on Sept. 24. Swift has just been named songwriter-artist of the year by the Nashville Songwriters Association International for a record-setting six times. She's also up for entertainer of the year at the CMAAs on Nov. 6. If she wins, she'd be the first woman with three such titles. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE

I've never been so challenged as a songwriter. I've never learned so much. I've never just been so excited to show up to the studio every day, just because you never know what we're going to put together.

I'll bring in ideas and they'll take such a different turn than where I thought they were going to go, and that level of unexpected spontaneity is something that really thrills me in the process of making music. ... "What if we did this? What if we made it weirder? What if we took it darker?" I love people who have endless strange and exciting ideas about where music can go.

Paul McCartney. Catchy, fun and not that New

Paul McCartney has published his first original material in six years.
MARC ANDREW DELEY/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

For his 16th solo record, and first original material in six years, Paul McCartney turned to a team of four hot producers to come up with something, ahem, New.

The result is both fresh and comfortably familiar. McCartney, a master of the catchy three-minute pop song, isn't reinventing himself here as the title may suggest. Rather, he's once again compiling an enjoyable 45 minutes or so of toe-tapping pop songs that are sure to please his longtime fans while doing little to break much truly new ground.

Just try listening to On My Way to Work or Queenie Eye without bobbing your head along to the beat. Really, love him or hate him, few can pump out these types of ditties quite like McCartney.

Still, he's no Bob Dylan.

There are flirtations with material with some gravitas here, but it's just that — a flirtation. McCartney may toy with addressing in song whatever demons he may have, but he certainly doesn't linger.

That said, the mere fact that McCartney is able to come up with something that isn't a simple retread of his past successes must be considered a success — especially when that would be the easy way out, and one that he's taken many times over his storied career.

Much of the credit for the success of New goes to McCartney's four producers — especially Paul Epworth (Adele) and Mark Ronson (Amy Winehouse). The other two, Giles Martin and Ethan Johns, are the sons of famous Beatles producers George Martin and Glyn Johns. While the multi-producer approach could have resulted in a hot mess, the end result is surprisingly cohesive, modern-sounding and, most of all, fun to listen to. THE

Golden Globes bring back the golden pair

Awards season. Tina Fey and Amy Poehler sign on for two more years of hosting the show after receiving critical acclaim

The duo of Tina Fey and Amy Poehler proved such a success at hosting the Golden Globes in January that they've been signed up for the same job for the next two years.

NBC, the Hollywood Foreign Press Association and producers of the Golden Globes announced the unusual two-year commitment on Tuesday. Next year's Golden Globes will be held in Beverly Hills, Calif., on Jan. 12.

Allen Shapiro, CEO of Dick Clark Productions, said the former Saturday Night Live chums have "a truly unique chemistry, making them one of the most talented and captivating pairings of all time."

They were bathed in critical love for their performance this year, with The Associated Press critic Frazier Moore

Allen Shapiro

CEO of Dick Clark Productions talking about Tina Fey and Amy Poehler

calling them "the night's biggest winners."

They got laughs without being polarizing, as was the case with predecessor Ricky Gervais. Poehler even poked fun during the show at the Hollywood debate over whether Gervais was too hard-edged in mocking Hollywood stars.

"We want to assure you that we have no intention of being edgy or offensive tonight," said Poehler, star of the NBC sitcom Parks and Recreation. "Because, as Ricky learned the hard way, when you run afoul of the Hollywood Foreign Press, they make you host this show two more times!"

Fey, whose NBC comedy 30 Rock ended this year, and Poehler were both nominated for best actress in a comedy or musical but lost to Lena Dunham, star of HBO's Girls.

More important than critical support, Fey and Poehler were good for business. The Golden Globes had their best ratings in six years for the most recent presentation, and were up 17 per cent over the 2012 show.

Hell has no fury like a woman scorned

Horror film. Soak in the wrath of the newest Carrie as the young woman lashes out at the society who tortured her

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

This weekend actress Chloë Grace Moretz will recreate one of the most famous sequences from 1970s cinema.

Years after the release of the 1976 Brian De Palma-directed Carrie, the movie's impact was summed up by Esquire, who wrote, "Like any top-tier, truly unforgettable scene in cinema (it's) so well-known that you don't even have to see it to know it."

The image of the teen-aged Carrie (Sissy Spacek), the victim of a cruel practical joke, dressed in her best prom queen outfit, wide eyed as pig's blood covers her, dripping from the fake jewels on her tiara, has been referenced in everything from the sitcom Roseanne — daughter Darlene says the only way she would go to the prom is if she was the one sitting in the rafters with a bucket of pig's blood — to the X-Files, Mystery Science Theater 3000, Scream, Gilmore Girls and even Veronica Mars.

The gore soaked scene also provided the inspiration for a sequel called The Rage: Carrie 2. In this unintentionally funny B-movie Rachel (Emily Bergl) is another high-schooler with the ability to make objects fly and explode with her mind.

"Do not attempt to sit through this movie without a hefty supply of psycho-pharmaceutical drugs," warned one critic.

Marginally better was Carrie, a 2002 television film meant to serve as a pilot for a proposed series. But that involved making some sweeping changes to the plot, including having Carrie survive the high school carnage and final run-in with her unstable mother. Bad reviews and poor ratings doomed this to the DVD delete bins. From the screen to the stage, Carrie provided the source material for an ill-conceived 1988 Broadway musical and several spoofs, including Scarriet! The Musical and Carrie's Facts of Life, a mash-up of Stephen King's story and the sitcom The Facts of Life.

All singing, all dancing versions of Carrie's humiliation aside, the original film remains a horror touchstone, but don't expect the new remake to be a carbon copy.

"The script is totally different from the (original)," Moretz told ET Online. "It's more like the book. It's a more Black Swan version — it messes with your mind."

One thing is for sure. There will be blood — pig's blood.

Judy Greer, who plays Miss Desjardin in the new film, says the prom scene is "amazeballs," adding, "It's really totally jarring and creepy but also, in a strange way, gorgeous."

Pig's blood continues to have a dramatic impact on the Carrie movie experience. CONTRIBUTED

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

Moving on

Seems Miley is sweet on the Rolling Stone heir

It looks like Miley Cyrus has gotten over her broken engagement to Liam Hemsworth pretty quickly, as the Wrecking Ball singer is reportedly smitten with Rolling Stone magazine heir Theo Wenner, according to Radar Online.

"She's definitely dating him," a source says. "Miley talks about how hot Theo is and how nice he's been to her. She's definitely completely in lust with him." Cyrus even reportedly made time for Wenner while launching her new album, Bangerz, in New York last week.

"He didn't come to the release party, but she snuck out at one point and went and met him at the Plaza," the source says. "She said she's never met anyone as sweet as Theo."

Taking a Wrecking Ball to the English language

Meanwhile, Cyrus is getting more public criticism from other parts of the music industry, with indie rocker Sufjan Stevens the latest to write Cyrus an open letter — only Stevens takes issue with her atrocious grammar.

"One particular line (in '#GetItRight') causes concern: 'I been laying in this bed all night long,'" he writes on his Tumblr account. "Miley, technically speaking, you've been LYING, not LAYING, an irregular verb form that should only be used when there's an object."

For his part, Paul McCartney thinks everyone's making a big fuss about nothing when it comes to Cyrus' infamous MTV VMAs performance. "You look at it and you say, 'What's everyone shouting about?' I think it was only mildly shocking. It wasn't explicit at all," the former Beatle tells Sky News.

Forget the tuna, get Kate some OJ

As pregnant Kate Winslet eases into her third trimester, she admits her cravings aren't living up to the stories she hears about other pregnancies.

"At the moment, I seem to be wanting orange juice a lot," she tells Us Weekly. "I don't know quite why that is, but it's not so weird. I wish I could tell you I had some weird craving. I wish I could be like that woman on the advert who loves tuna fish and banana, but I'm not like that at all."

Meanwhile, Winslet insists she's totally fine doing press for her next film, Labor Day, with her due date approaching. "Just don't let me sneeze," she warns, "because I might wet myself at the same time."

He's an actor, but don't tell Charlie Hunnam to be someone he's not

While Charlie Hunnam may have cited his hectic TV schedule as the reason he dropped out of Fifty Shades of Grey, sources tell E! News that the spotlight had a lot more to do with it.

"More than anything he hates attention, and being in Fifty Shades of Grey would force him to do lots of media," a source says. "Plus, he hates conforming and being told what to do. This role would force him to have to be something he is not." Now it turns out his former co-star, Dakota Johnson, may be having doubts about the high-profile film as well. "Dakota is having a very hard time dealing with all the press. When she first got the role, it was way too much for her," another source says. "It's been tough."

Why Gwyneth should beware Vanity Fair

Gwyneth Paltrow should probably be bracing herself for a blockbuster take-down piece on her that Vanity Fair is planning to publish.

"We started a story on her. We have a very good writer and it'll run," the magazine's editor-in-chief, Graydon Carter, tells the Times of London.

In fact, Paltrow apparently helped ensure the piece will go forward when she emailed friends and colleagues pleading with them to not cooperate with the article's author and never work with the magazine again. "She sort of forced my hand," Carter says.

Sleek, chic and sexy. This is a city that's got a lot on the go, and it's consistently one of the top draws for Canadians looking for a place in the sun with a bit of attitude. Whether it's clubbing in a brilliant turquoise Art Deco building in South Beach or doffing your duds at one of the few legal nude beaches in the U.S., this is a town with something for everyone.

Sleeping

The Soho Beach House, a few blocks north of South Beach, is cooler than the other side of the pillow on a winter camping trip in Yellowknife. There's a rooftop bar with perfectly weathered chairs, a sleek restaurant under the trees, a glam pool with striped blue and white cushions and it's right on Miami Beach. The lobby screams urban cool, and they also get cheeky with Cowshed toiletries that have names like Horny Cow and Knackered Cow. Uptown in Sunny Isles, not far from the shops of Aventura Mall, is Sole on the Ocean, which has a Miami Vice meets Brazil and Russia vibe, thanks to the shoppers who flock here. The bar is modern and glassy and they have a cozy pool and nice cabanas. Rooms go from around $325 a night at the Soho Beach House in October, while you can grab Sole for $216 a night and up.

Dining

Just steps from trendy Lincoln Road on Lenox Avenue, Yardbird is a gem for southern food. There's a nice patio, and inside you'll find a warm decor with an open kitchen and chalkboard signs that extol the virtues of bacon. The fried chicken is moist and tender and served on superbly fluffy biscuits with honey and sweet pepper jelly. The kale salad comes with shaved cheddar, apples, onion and "moonshine soaked" raisins. Back up in Sunny Isles, Timo has a wood oven for pizza and does a flavourful fennel and arugula salad with oranges, figs and a pistachio vinaigrette.

The pastry chef makes an incredible genoise cheese flan topped with vanilla ice cream and toasted coconut in a pool of salted caramel with a chocolate drizzle. The News Café in South Beach (open 24 hours) is a great spot for lunch or breakfast and has two-for-one happy hours Monday to Friday from 4 to 7 p.m.

Drinking

The Cleveland Hotel is a 1938 Art Deco beauty that spouts loud music more or less all day, with dancing girls gyrating inches from the sidewalk. It's said to be the highest-grossing bar in Florida. At Soho Beach House opt for the Picante de la Casa, with tequila, lime, cilantro and agave, topped with a red chile pepper for a smoky kick. Yardbird has bourbons you might never see in Canada.

A few simple substitutions take hummus from Middle East to Italy

This recipe serves four. MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

What would happen if hummus had been invented in Italy, rather than the Middle East?

Answer the question with this simple reimagining of the classic chickpea purée.

It's not as discordant as you might think. Many of the same flavour profiles can be found across both Italian and Middle Eastern cuisines.

Which makes sense, given relative geographic proximity. Even the ingredients and technique have common ground.

Italians make generous use of chickpeas and lemons — both essential to classic hummus. Though in the case of chickpeas, Italians tend to use them more often in soups and pastas than in spreads.

And when they do make spreads, they often reach for other beans, such as favas. While traditional hummus relies on tahini (ground sesame seeds) to add richness, Italians probably would be more inclined to reach for pine nuts.

So with those substitutions in mind, this delicious Italian-style hummus is topped with diced tomatoes spiked with balsamic vinegar.

1. In a food processor, combine the beans, half of the garlic, pine nuts, lemon zest and juice, and 1 tablespoon of the rosemary. Process until chunky smooth.

2. With the processor running, drizzle in the olive oil until the hummus reaches a smooth, silky texture. Taste, then season with salt and pepper, and set aside.

3. In a bowl, toss together the tomatoes, the remaining 1 teaspoon of rosemary and the remaining garlic. Taste, then season with salt and pepper.

4. Spoon the hummus into a wide, shallow bowl, using the back of the spoon to form a cavity at the centre.

5. Spoon tomatoes into the cavity in the hummus. Drizzle olive oil over the tomatoes and hummus, then sprinkle with a few drops of balsamic vinegar. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Students and grads speak up on tattoos in the workplace

GREAVES
TalentEgg.ca

The influx of millennials into the workforce and the potential for age gaps between co-workers can result in mixed opinions on what is considered appropriate office wear.

Gen Y is often viewed as having a more casual approach to office appearance. That's not to say all millennials want to wear their sweatpants to work. It just means that younger hires are perceived to have open minds when it comes to what is acceptable in the office.

Kim Holt recently graduated from McMaster University and entered the workforce with tattoos.

Here's what Holt had to say about how tattoos can work both ways for your career.

Did you think about the effect your tattoos might have on your career?

I 100 per cent thought about how my tattoos might affect my career before I got them. However, aside from my tattoos, I have always been a creative and eccentric person. I knew from a very young age that when I grew up I was going to be in a field that thrived on creativity and originality.

Has having tattoos ever hindered your career or education?

Yes and no — having tattoos has yet to hinder my education. Many universities these days pride themselves on their acceptance of diversity. My tattoos have yet to impact my career.

Have you had to adjust your clothing at times to avoid a potential employer seeing them or felt stereotyped by an employer for having tattoos?

Does this worker's indelible accessory make you question his professionalism? ISTOCK

Where I currently work, I have never been made to feel like I cannot show my tattoos. However, when I first interviewed for the job I did dress appropriately and professionally. I think that no matter what kind of job you are interviewing for (whether you are allowed to show your tattoos or not), dressing formal is simply a sign of respect. It shows the potential employer that this is something you thought about, you have come prepared, and you took yourself out of your everyday life and into the world of employment. I have interviewed for many casual and formal attire jobs and I never let the day-to-day attire influence my interview wear.

If you could give one piece of advice to job seekers who are considering getting tattoos, what would it be?

Tattoos are a small part of a big picture. We can't predict the future but if an individual thinks that a tattoo is going to make them happy, then do it. Who is to say what we will regret in the future and what we won't? The only person who can control your happiness is yourself, and every person has their own way of fulfilling their happiness and self-expression and for me one of those ways just happens to be tattoos.

Are you going to the career fair?

Walking down the aisle of employment.
Tips for individuals on how to approach a mass job hunt

Whether they're held in malls, on campuses or in convention centres, career fairs offer a one-stop shop for job seekers to connect with multiple recruiters under one roof.

Yet with the prospect of meeting dozens of employers, some may be unsure how to tailor their typical approach within a large-scale setting.

How can individuals prepare for career fairs and distinguish themselves among a crowded crop of equally eager job-seekers? Here are a few tips.

Determine the motivation for attending

It seems obvious and inherent in the event title: job fairs are for landing jobs, right? Well, not necessarily for everyone — or at least not initially.

Patsy Valenzuela is the supervisor of career and employment development at Mount Royal University in Calgary. The school organizes smaller, program-specific networking events during the year in addition to a campus-wide fair in March for students seeking summer, full-time and graduate-level employment.

While securing a job may be the ultimate goal, Valenzuela said some people may have other motivations for attending fairs at first, like trying to gather more information about a particular company or their field of interest.

"It could be more of an exploration — you just want to build some contacts, or

Eyes on the prize

"I think if you're a job seeker, it's important to know what is your goal in attending, and what do you want to get out of attending, and then prepare accordingly."

Patsy Valenzuela
Supervisor of career and employment development at Mount Royal University for some people, you just want to practise some interview skills and meeting people," she said. "That's a really great way to do that because it's a safe environment where you can practise networking and introducing yourself and all of those techniques."

"I think if you're a job seeker, it's important to know what is your goal in attending, and what do you want to get out of attending, and then prepare accordingly."

Keep your ears open

Busy exhibitor booths can leave individuals idling as they wait to speak with designated representatives. But Valenzuela said the time spent queuing up for a chance to chat can still be put to effective use.

"There's a lot to be said for listening and watching as well. There's a lot of times where there's lineups and you definitely don't want to interrupt, but you might get a lot out of the information coming out of those conversations — information you can use," she said.

"Definitely take notes because the fairs are busy. There's so many people, so many conversations, you might not remember who you spoke to or what information you learned. So it's going to be really important to take notes and to follow up on some of those pieces of information that you've gathered. And for some of it, it might just be a lead or somebody's name."

Pens down Oilers to stay perfect at home

Evgeni Malkin stood in the right circle just watching the play unfold in front of him when the puck suddenly materialized on his stick with nary a soul around.

The empty net never had a chance.

period to put the Penguins in front for good in a 3-2 win over Edmonton on Tuesday night.

"Tough angle, great shot by Geno," Pittsburgh star Sidney Crosby said. "He's been getting chances, it's always nice to see them go in."

Something that seems to be happening a lot for the Penguins, who remained unbeaten and largely unchallenged at home. Crosby assisted on all three Pittsburgh goals to vault him into the NHL scoring lead, two of the assists going to linemates Chris Kunitz and Pascal Dupuis.

Marc-Andre Fleury stopped 20 shots to improve to 5-0, including a handful of spectacular saves to fend off the Oilers, who twice rallied to tie the game.

"He's making all the right saves at the right time," Kunitz said.

Ales Hemsky and Jordan Eberle scored for Edmonton. Jason LaBarbera made 25 saves but was nowhere to be found on the game-winner.

The Penguins were on the power play when Crosby fed defenceman Paul Martin at the point. Martin wound up for a one-timer but instead dribbled a knuckler that slowly rolled right to Malkin. LaBarbera wasn't sure what happened until Malkin was celebrating.

"I didn't know what happened," LaBarbera said. "I look over and the puck is on his stick and I was kind of in no man's land." THE CANADIAN PRESS

British racer killed in training crash

Sean Edwards, a promising British driver, died Tuesday in a crash during training. He was 26.

Edwards, the Supercup Championship leader, was in the passenger seat as an instructor for a private training session at Queensland Raceway at Willowbank, outside Brisbane, Australia, Porsche Motorsport said.

A 20-year-old local driver was behind the wheel when the car crashed into a tire wall and caught fire.

Balotelli tweets could force ban

Mario Balotelli's latest tweets could cause a social-media ban for team Italy at next year's World Cup.

Balotelli took issue with an Italian article that said he would be the face of Italy's battle against the Camorra when the Azzurri trained on Monday with a club that was stripped of organized-crime ties.

A tweet from Balotelli said, "That's what you say! I'm coming because football is great and everyone should play it where they want to and then there's the match!!!!"

Canadiens' Price holds Jets scoreless at home

Canadiens goalie Carey Price
THE CANADIAN PRESS

Carey Price made 35 saves as the Montreal Canadiens extended their winning streak to three games with a 3-0 victory over the Winnipeg Jets on Tuesday.

It was Price's first shutout of the season and 20th of his career. Ondrej Pavelec faced 25 shots for the Jets (3-4-0).

Brandon Prust, P.K. Subban and Daniel Briere, with an empty-netter on the power play, scored for Montreal (4-2-0), which ended a four-game road trip and returns home for five straight.

It was the third of a six-game homestand for the Jets, the longest of their season. They host St. Louis on Friday.

With a number of fans wearing Habs jerseys in the stands at MTS Centre, the visitors quickly opened the scoring.

A Briere shot off the boards led to Prust's goal, as the puck bounced to him at the corner of the net and he poked it in behind Pavelec to make it 1-0 at 2:06.

It took the Jets just under seven minutes to get their first shot on goal, a span that included their own power play, as the Habs kept most of the action in Winnipeg's end.

Winnipeg killed off a penalty, but about a minute later Subban blasted a one-timer past Pavelec at 11:28, his eighth point in six games. The shots on goal at that point were 7-1 for Montreal.

The Jets finally turned it on during another power play, boosting their shots on goal to close Montreal's advantage to 10-8 at the end of the first period.

Cardinals get bats booming to take series stranglehold

NLCS. Cards' Holliday homers in 3rd after 22 straight hitless at-bats at Dodger stadium

Matt Holliday and pinch-hitter Shane Robinson connected for the first home runs of the NL championship series, and the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 4-2 Tuesday night to take a 3-1 lead in their best-of-seven playoff.

In a series starved for offense, the Cardinals scored as many runs as they did in the first three games combined, when the teams totalled nine runs.

Game 5 is Wednesday afternoon at Dodger Stadium, with the Cardinals one win from the World Series. Zack Greinke is set to start for Los Angeles against Joe Kelly.

Of course, St. Louis had a 3-1 lead in last year's NLCS before dropping three straight to San Francisco, the eventual World Series champion.

It was a painful defeat for the Dodgers — in more ways than one. Star shortstop Hanley Ramirez, playing with a broken left rib, left in the middle of the sixth after striking out three times.

"It got worse as we went along," manager Don Mattingly said.

St. Louis third baseman David Freese came out after six innings. He left Monday's game with a cramp in his right calf.

Hitless in his previous 22 at-bats at Dodger Stadium, Holliday sent a two-run shot off Ricky Nolasco an estimated 426 feet to left field, capping a three-run third that gave the Cardinals a 3-0 lead.

Seeking a second title in three years, St. Louis turned three important double plays and picked off a runner at second base in the seventh. Defensive standout Pete Kozma, inserted at shortstop in the sixth, started a difficult double play and darted in to complete the pickoff. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Red Sox hurlers lights-out against Tigers sluggers

John Lackey edged Justin Verlander in the latest duel of these pitching-rich playoffs, and Boston's bullpen shut down Detroit's big boppers with the game on the line to lift the Red Sox over the Tigers 1-0 Tuesday for a 2-1 lead in the AL championship series.

Mike Napoli homered off Verlander in the seventh inning, and Detroit's best chance to rally fell short in the eighth when Miguel Cabrera and Prince Fielder struck out with runners at the corners.

Despite three straight gems by their starters, the Tigers suddenly trail in a best-of-seven series they seemed to have complete control of only two days ago. Game 4 is Wednesday night in Detroit, with Jake Peavy scheduled to start for the Red Sox against Doug Fister.

Lackey allowed four hits in 6 2/3 innings, striking out eight in a game that was delayed 17 minutes in the second inning because lights on the stadium towers went out.

Koji Uehara pitched 1 1/3 innings for the save.

The 2014 Ford Tremor

ALL PHOTOS WHEELBASEMEDIA.COM

Review. Sandwiched between the long-gone SVT Lightning and the off-road SVT Raptor, the new Tremor may be the best of both worlds

wheelbasemedia.com

Move over SVT Raptor because the Ford Tremor sport truck wants a piece of the action.

But instead of muscling its way into the specialty truck category, the more modestly powered and sized pickup aims to win friends with on-road street smarts — and not just off-road ability — as well as livable fuel efficiency.

Pickup trucks are as much about style and image as passenger cars. In fact the convergence of the two automotive genres over the past few decades has been quite remarkable. Originally little more than a bench seat and a box, the once humble pickup can now be found clothed in fancy sheetmetal, gussied up in the finest of interior trim and accessories and revved up with enough horsepower to plant you in your seat.

Ford's F-150-based Raptor that's now entering its fourth year of production has been a surprise hit at a time when all other pickup makers — Ford included — have been trying their best to reduce their truck's appetite for fuel. But whereas the Raptor's image is as a dune-bashing desert rat, the Tremor takes a different approach. It's very much a street truck, just like the 2000-2004 SVT Lightning, packaged up with equipment and accessories that collectively give it a unique flavour.

It's also only available as a short-wheelbase, regular-cab model fitted with the shortest available box. The result is not as useful as an extended-cab F-150 or a four-door crew cab, but it makes the Tremor lighter on its feet and in a way that actually seems more purpose-built, just like the short-box, regular-cab Lightning of old.

To give the Tremor its solid-citizen demeanor, Ford opted not to take the V8 route (the Lightning had a supercharged 5.4-litre unit) and instead installed a twin-turbocharged 3.5-litre V6 that produces 365 horsepower and 420 pound-feet of torque at 2,500 r.p.m.

Those aren't exactly weak-kneed stats — they're about the same as the Lightning, actually — and they clearly indicate that the "EcoBoost" V6 will give a good accounting of itself from a standing start, especially with the 4.10:1 rear-axle gear. The powertrain can be optioned with an electronic locking rear differential that reduces wheel slippage, especially when accelerating from a dead stop.

The Tremor also dominates the much larger and heavier SVT Raptor's 16.5/11.0 fuel economy.

Also looking good is the Tremor's interior, where Ford has tossed out the regular

Fuel Economy

The rear-wheel-drive Tremor should deliver in the neighbourhood of 13 l/100 km city and 9.3 l/100 km highway. Those unofficial estimates will suffer a bit with optional four-wheel-drive and will likely take a real beating in the hands of buyers who actually drive the Tremor the way it's intended.

Design

The Tremor's distinguishing exterior features begin with an appearance package that includes a blacked-out grille insert, darkened headlight and taillight covers, chromed exhaust tip and black 20-inch wheels with Pirelli Scorpion tires.

The simple yet sleek interior is accompanied by the MyFordTouch system.

cab's standard cloth-covered bench seat and installed twin buckets covered in tasteful leather with faux suede inserts and contrasting piping. In addition, there's an industrial-looking floor shifter integrated with a generously sized console.

Included as standard is MyFordTouch communication and infotainment system (run by a touchscreen). With a guesstimated starting price in the mid-$40,000 range, including destination charges (about $15,000 shy of the SVT Raptor), the well-equipped Tremor is a pretty appealing vehicle that just might catch on with pickup buyers looking for some show and go, as opposed to owning a straight-up work truck.

Healthy used TSX is a confident buy

Second gear.

2009-2012

JUSTIN
drive@metronews.ca

With four or six-cylinder power, manual or automatic transmissions and numerous option packages available, Acura expanded the TSX model lineup to ensure there was a model just right for virtually any budget.

All variants of this Japanese luxury sports sedan were front-wheel drive, packed room for four adults (five in a pinch) and came with Acura's promise of safety, reliable performance, high resale value and owner satisfaction.

Look for Bluetooth connectivity, premium audio system options, xenon lights, automatic climate control, heated leather and navigation when you compare the used TSX to its competitors in the market. These include the Cadillac CTS, BMW 3-Series and Audi A4.

CONTRIBUTED

Common issues

Shoppers are advised to check the condition of the brakes on the TSX they're considering, as owners have reported premature brake wear somewhat frequently. A loud clunking noise when coming to a stop, or when just taking off, could be the result of an issue with the TSX's front-end, possibly relating to a ball-joint or strut assembly. If in doubt, have a mechanic get the TSX you're considering in the air for a check of the suspension. Electronics checks should include the remote key fobs, the trunk release, all interior illumination, and the memory seating function. Be sure to check that both headlights are functional, as a burned-out xenon bulb can be relatively pricey to replace. Though somewhat rare and dependent on driver skill and habits, there is some discussion of clutch failure at low miles within the TSX owner's community. Ensure the clutch, if equipped, isn't slipping or worn out on the model you're considering. Driving at highway speed, "feel" the TSX for signs of vibration from the front of the car, possibly through the steering wheel. If you note any, an out-of-balance driveshaft might be the culprit.

What owners like Owners report feeling safe, and most rate the performance, even with the four-cylinder engine, positively. The feature-to-dollar ratio, say TSX owners online, is also favourable.

What owners dislike

Common gripes include boring styling, lack of available AWD, and some drivers wish for higher performance for the up-level audio system.

Engine

Standard models were motivated by a 2.4 litre VTEC four-banger with a smidgen over 200 horsepower. This engine came with automatic or six-speed manual transmissions. The TSX V6 got a 3.5 litre V6 engine with 280 horsepower and an automatic transmission only.

The verdict

The TSX seems affected mainly by issues that'll be easy to diagnose and "feel" on a test-drive, and seems pleasantly free of major driveline and suspension-related problems. If the brakes, clutch and electronics on the model you're considering check out, the TSX is a model that can be bought with relative confidence where fuel mileage, sporty handling and an upscale driving experience are priorities.

Hyundai's futuristic safety double act

Autopilot. Automaker has paired the clever duo of Heads Up Display and Blind Spot Detection with excellent result for their flagship model the Equus

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

So many new features and functions are being baked into modern vehicles today that sometimes even really remarkable ones get overlooked or lost in the shuffle.

Especially if they're really tiny — the kind you could metaphorically sit on by mistake. As such, I would like to draw your attention to something small but big on Hyundai's flagship, the Equus. The big sedan was updated for 2014 and received a slew of new technologies and features. Among them were Blind-Spot Detection and a Heads-Up Display (HUD).

Now, both these features are cool enough, but certainly not NASA-like. What's unique and exciting is that Equus is the first vehicle ever to combine the two. It's like Bert and Ernie: Separately, they're funny, but together they can blow your comedy mind.

For those not familiar with Heads Up Display, it is a technology first developed for military aircraft. Information is projected right onto the windshield, so pilots could keep their "head up" and look forward, and not down and around, to where all the gauges are located. The HUD data is small and transparent, so you can see through it. It doesn't affect forward vision.

The need to keep "heads up" is not as crucial in automobiles, but putting stuff like vehicle speed and navigation directions in a HUD is wildly convenient. But Blind Spot Warnings in the HUD is a completely other thing — it really changes the way you drive in traffic. You never have to turn your head! You're always looking down the road and when vehicles come in and out of your rear-flank blinds spots, you get a polite, little visual notice in the HUD.

I found this really reduced the stress of having to deal with other vehicles on the highway. I only attempted lane changes when I knew it was "all clear" and I never spent time looking and craning for gaps that never existed. And when I changed lanes, I changed with confidence. I always confirmed with shoulder checks, but no one was there when I did. It's a simple, brilliant, little piece of technology.

The only caveat is that it frees up part of the driving brain. This should be useful, but most times you just start having Seinfeld moments, and wonder about stuff that doesn't really help mankind, like why is breakfast sausage typically thinner than regular sausage?

I'm sure we'll see this technology trickle down to vehicles costing less than the $72,229 Equus Ultimate. It's always happened before, with other useful technologies. Witness cigarette lighters, cruise, heated seats, air bags, ABS, etc.

But keep your eye on the Google Glass. It could be the wild card in the vehicle HUD story, as it seems bent on becoming the HUD of choice for everything.

Espresso yourself

For anyone on the go, you no longer have to wait in line at a specialty coffee emporium for your favourite cup of espresso. In fact, you don't even have to leave your car. Handpresso of France makes this portable 140-watt espresso machine that fits into your vehicle's cupholder and plugs into any 12-volt receptacle, such as a lighter socket. The $200 US machine accepts most E.S.E (Easy Serving Espresso) coffee pods and brews up the contents in about two minutes (the Handpresso beeps three times once the process is completed). You can get all the details regarding this unique device and available accessories at handpresso.com, but your best bet for North American orders is to check out nextag.com.

Who's the grime boss?

Working under the hood can be a messy chore at best and requires a strong cleaner for degunking your hands. Grime Boss Heavy Duty Hand Cleaning Wipes are claimed to rid your digits of oily grease, paint, sticky adhesives, odours and just about anything else you might come into contact with. On one side, each wipe contains aloe and vitamin E for wiping and moisturizing your face, while the slightly more abrasive side is specifically designed for scrubbing hands. As the manufacturer states, "This ain't no baby wipe." Grime Boss prices range from $20 US for a 10-pack of 60 wipes each (other package quantities are available) and can be purchased directly from grimeboss.com.

Make mine leather

You don't want to drop just old set of floor mats into your expensive vehicle or classic car. Not when there's a wide assortment of genuine leather mats available from Inpelle Auto Accessories. The company makes seat coverings for BMW, Porsche and Audi and now offers custom-fitted floor mats for a variety of other makes. The leather used has been given a special waterproof finish that is claimed to resist all sorts of dirt and grime. They also fit just like original-equipment mats so they won't slip and slide. And with four colours and two different styles to choose from, you should be able to find something you like. Each set of front and rear mats sells for about US $290 and can be ordered from inpelleautoaccessories.com.

The first Indy winter

On May 30, 1911, a 29-year-old race driver/engineer nicknamed "The Little Professor" came out of retirement for one last event, which happened to be the very first running of the Indianapolis 500. Ray Harroun won that event in a time of six hours, 42 minutes and eight seconds at an average speed approaching 120 km-h. The winning car, a black and yellow pointy-tailed Marmon Wasp, is currently on display at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway Hall of Fame. The original Wasp is priceless, but anyone can order an exact 1:18-scale (about eight-inches long) fiberglass replica of Harroun's racer for US $230 from Replicarz of Rutland, Vermont. Obtain complete information and ordering details at replicarz.com.

Breakdown or crash? Here's what to do

Driving force. Keep calm, remove your car from the road if possible and wait for the police or tow truck to arrive

drive@metronews.ca

It's every motorist's worst nightmare: your car breaks down while you're driving, or you're involved in a collision.

You're stopped, but other traffic isn't, and now you have to worry not just about your vehicle, but also your safety around other ones.

"Try to pull your car off to the side of the road as quickly as you can, and as safely as possible," says Silvana Aceto, media consultant for CAA South Central Ontario. "It's a stressful situation, but don't panic, and try to stay calm."

In a breakdown, turn on your four-way flashers to warn other drivers, even if you're able to get off the road.

Note exactly where you are so you can call and direct a tow truck to your location, using such clues as the intersection, highway exits or kilometre markers, or landmarks such as shopping plazas or restaurants.

Whether it's safer to remain inside or outside your car will depend on the situation, Aceto says,

Safety first

"Try to pull your car off to the side of the road as quickly as you can, and as safely as possible."

Silvana Aceto, media consultant for CAA South Central Ontario.

but if you choose to get out, watch for oncoming vehicles, especially at night or in bad weather.

Don't stand directly behind or in front of your vehicle, in case someone runs into it.

Never cross the highway, as vehicles are moving much faster than they appear, and you can't properly judge the distance.

In a collision, assess if anyone is hurt and needs immediate medical assistance. Then, if it's safe to do so, move the vehicles off the road.

Be very cautious and stay off the road, since "rubbernecking" drivers staring at the crash may not see you in front of them.

Write down or snap a photo of the other vehicle's license plate; if the driver takes off, you have a record of it. In Ontario, collisions that exceed $1,000 in damage must be reported to the police.

It's a good idea to keep a notebook and pen in your glovebox. Make a note of important details, such as the time of the crash, the weather, the position of the cars, and if traffic lights were red or green.

Get the other driver's information, including name, driver's license number, insurance details and the names and phone numbers of any witnesses.

Be sure to forward these to your insurance company when you're reporting the collision.

Take precautions

• Go online. CAA has free downloadable checklists, to help with collisions or breakdowns, at caasco.ca.

• Fighting solves nothing. Don't argue with the other driver in a collision. If he or she becomes agitated, sit in your vehicle with the doors locked until the police arrive.

• Maintenance is key. You can help avoid breakdowns by keeping your car well-maintained and by repairing problems promptly.

Horoscopes

Aries

March 21 - April 20

Nothing is beyond your capabilities today but you must be clear what you desire. If not, you may scatter your energy while failing to reach the one destination that matters.

Taurus

April 21 - May 21

Someone who usually gives you a hard time will be as nice as pie today and you will be a bit suspicious. They do want to improve your relationship. Meet them halfway.

Gemini

May 22 - June 21

People are different and clashes of opinion are inevitable. It is how you choose to deal with them that counts. Don't try to shout others down. Discuss your differences rationally.

Cancer

June 22 - July 23

Listen to and act upon your instincts. If you proceed on the assumption that your inner voice knows best, you won't go wrong. If you listen to "experts", you may go everywhere but where you should.

Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23

The more others tell you that something cannot be done, the more you will strive to prove them wrong. You won't even have to strive too hard as everything comes easy to you now.

Virgo

Aug. 24 - Sept. 23

The cure for the blues is action, so throw yourself into something that requires effort and concentration today and you will soon forget your worries — and you'll be in a more positive mood to deal with Friday's eclipse.

Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23

Venus, your ruler, linked to Uranus, planet of the unexpected, will bring nice surprises today but don't take anything for granted. Find ways to show you appreciate it.

Scorpio

Oct. 24 - Nov. 22

Your enemies may be tough but you are tougher and no matter how hard they try to outsmart you over the next 24 hours, they won't succeed. Be gracious and forgiving in victory. It'll annoy them more.

Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21

Someone new will come into your life over the next 24 hours, someone who makes a big impression. Will you fall head over heels in love? Maybe. But even if you don't, it's a friendship made in heaven.

Capricorn

Dec. 22 - Jan. 20

Today's Venus-Uranus link will perk you up and help you see that even when things seem to be going wrong you are still moving in the right direction. Don't worry about tomorrow.

Aquarius

Jan. 21 - Feb. 19

Push your luck as far as it will go today. You may be surprised how easily others give in to your demands. For best results though, make sure they gain too. There's more than enough good stuff to go around.

Pisces

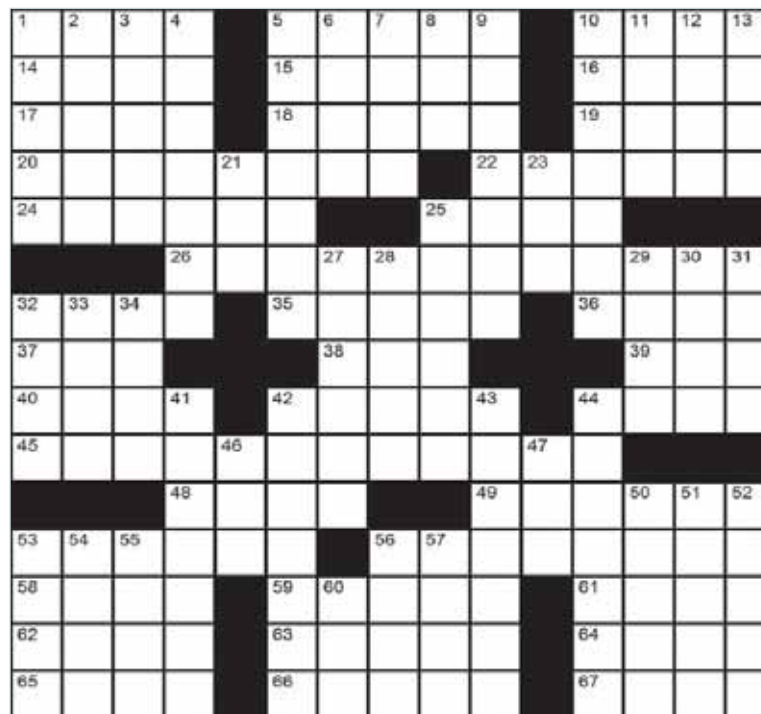

Feb. 20 - March 20

Go all out to impress those in positions of power. The more you act as if nothing is too much, the more inclined others will be to shower you with praise. SALLY BROMPTON
